"Regenerative tourism" means tourism practices that contribute to the restoration and enhancement of local ecosystems, adhere to sustainable practices, respect and preserve local culture, and support the local community.

HTA

Regenerative tourism recognizes the interconnectedness of environmental, social, and economic factors. This tourism approach emphasizes designing and managing tourism to provide net benefits for local communities and destinations. By fostering collaboration, it enables communities to thrive, offering visitors genuine and meaningful experiences while improving the well-being of the environment, residents, and indigenous communities for future generations.
